Writing for wikiHow Tutorial

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia, “wikiHow is a web-based and wiki-based community, consisting of an extensive database of how-to guides. wikiHow's mission is to build the world's largest and highest quality how-to manual.”

wikiHow is a site that allows writers to contribute and edit their content as well as the content of other contributors. wikiHow is a user friendly site for writers, editors and anyone who can show you how to do something.

Why Use wikiHow

wikiHow is perfect for contributors to show their authority on how to do something. It's fun to help others with your knowledge. According to Google Analytics, over 40 million people a month read wikiHow and they are ranked 150th most popular website by Quantcast. wikiHow's broad reach gives writers the chance to connect with a large audience. Through collaborating with others contributors can build their writing and leadership skills.

You can earn awards, contests and create group projects. Awards are earned by wikiHow awards teams as well as users. They can be given for quality edits, helpfulness and exceptional contributor on wikiHow.

Projects focus on a set of similar articles. Teams focus on particular tasks within the group. Projects range from the pumpkin project to improve Halloween articles to the formatting project that formats articles.

You can create your own contests or join in contests offered occasionally through wikiHow.

The last option box is to publish an article you've already written or published on another site. Here you will have to email wikiHow with the URL or file so they can post it.

Writing Tips

You are writing an article for someone who hasn't done the task before. They are searching for a solution to their how-to problem. You need to make your articles clear, concise and informative.

- Don't add the "How-to" in the title since wikiHow does this for you.
- Don't number each step. They are already a part of the template.
- Begin with an action verb.
- Check for spelling errors to keep the quality of the article high.
- Fix your grammar mistakes by proofreading.

Featured Article

Featured articles are wikiHow's way of showcasing the best work submitted. Each day new featured articles are shown on their homepage and in their feeds. These articles are insightful, reference facts, are detailed in their instructions, use quality images, videos and links. They go the extra mile with more details in the tips, warnings and things you need sections. A featured article shows your authority on your topic

Do more on wikiHow

Other things you can do on wikiHow include answering requests, formatting articles, add videos and patrol recent changes.

Patrolling

Every wiki has a list of any recent changes made to it, including edits. Anyone can become a patroller who are responsible for changing any bad or unhelpful edits back to original. Patrollers can offer one-on-one coaching to wikiHow writers as well.

Read and understand the writer's guidelines before beginning the editing process. Communicate with editors you have reverted copy from. Use the undo tab instead of rollback if you want to leave the edit summary. Go for quality of patrols reviewed instead of quantity.

In the patrol tips pane, click the edit tips for grammar and spelling. Click on Delete or Publish when you are finished editing.

Answer Requests

wikiHow's growth has made it hard to find topics to write about. There are still many topics available though. You can find them by using wikiHow's "Answer a Request" system. This feature allows you to search for potential topics to write about.

You can request to have articles written as well.

To find requests, click on the List Requested Topics page and then choose a category. Here you can see a list of articles to be written. Click on the Write button next to the article you want to answer.
